Big 4 Conference

VIRTUALLY DOOMED TO FAILURE

London, Dec. 7.—Well-informed circles today said American officials were virtually reconciled to the failure of the Big Four Foreign Ministers' conference here. Some officials are prepared, if the meeting breaks up in disagreement, to recommend that no date be set at present for another meeting.

All hope has not been abandoned that the Russian Foreign Minister (Mr Vyacheslav Molotov) still may make some concession to avoid open failure such as whittling down mutually the Russian demands for US$10,000,000 in reparations from Germany, but there has been nothing to indicate any chance for agreement between Russia and the Western Allies on any major point of the German and Austrian treaties.

DULLES BACK IN LONDON

Mr Dulles returned tonight. It was understood he would prepare a memorandum for Mr Marshall on his talks in Paris with French Government leaders and with General Charles de Gaulle. Right Wing "strong man" who demands that he be given power. It was understood the Dulles memorandum would reflect optimism on the possibility that France would successfully resist the Communist-inspired crisis.

Informants indicated that Mr Marshall was displeased and that in diplomatic manner he was likely to remind Mr Dulles who was Secretary of State. A high-ranking official said there was no doubt that if any other member of the American delegation had done what Mr Dulles had done in the Paris visit, he would have been sent home in a hurry. It was now apparent that Mr Dulles had been sent by Mr Marshall, but obtained Mr Marshall's permission to go, and that Mr Marshall had no idea the visit would result in a fiasco of publicity. The French as well as the Americans are upset because their Foreign Minister (Mr Georges Bidault) has not been on speaking terms with General de Gaulle for months.—United Press.

WOMEN ROBBED

Cowes, Dec. 7.—Two men, one of them masked, forced their way into Norris Castle, where Queen Victoria once lived, and stole rings from the fingers of two women.

Last night, Mrs Florence Binbeck went to answer the front door when the men confronted and attacked her. She was found lying on the floor by her sister, a Mrs Laven. The men demanded the keys of the castle and took nearly £100.—Reuter.

EDITORIAL

Fear Of The Future

HATRED and slaughter in the Holy Land; sabotage and strikes in France; distress and disorders in Italy; hunger and bitterness in Germany; civil war and crippling inflation in China; a Communist coup in newly independent Burma. These are the headlines of the day and constitute a dramatic challenge to the conception of world peace which the so-called United Nations are supposed to be striving to attain. Much of the trouble can be attributed to post-war effects—an unbalanced world economy, devastation of industrial and agricultural areas, and a desperate attempt to start rough and ready solutions. But these are not the only factors. As after World War I, the nations continue to place more emphasis on narrow issues such as national sovereignty and prestige than on international goodwill and co-operation. Suspicious instead of mutual confidence characterizes the meetings of the world's leading statesmen and dominate the debates of the United Nations organization. In London the Big Four dreadingly prolong negotiations on the future of Germany and Austria with little or no signs of agreement on fundamental points. Russia continues to be suspicious of the motives of Britain and the United States and to adopt a defensive attitude which expresses itself negatively any major proposal advanced by either or both of these countries. Cyprus Union Changes Mind

Nicosia, Cyprus, Dec. 7.—The Pan-Cyprian Federation of Labour decided at a general meeting here to drop its claim for the union of Cyprus with Greece and pledged itself to an island-wide campaign for self-government under the British Crown.

After the meeting, the Federation called to the Colonial Secretary, Mr Arthur Creech Jones, threatening a 48-hour general strike if the self-government demands of the Cyprus Consultative Assembly are refused.

The Assembly, which opened on November 1 to frame a new constitution for Cyprus, has declared that it would accept a constitution similar to those of Malta and Ceylon with all members of the legislature elected and the Governor's powers restricted to defence and external affairs.

The annual conference of the Pan-Cyprian Federation of Labour last May unanimously supported the union of Cyprus with Greece but agreed that "as long as Greece is ruled by a Fascist monarchy, its achievement is remote."—Reuter.

SECRET FOOD PARLEYS

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—The secrets of the food negotiations between Britain and Canada, which have been in progress behind closed doors here for nearly a fortnight, may be revealed by questions to be addressed to the Government in Parliament this week.

The Canadian Government, committed to a policy of long-term contracts with Britain, is striving to fulfill its six-year promise to Canadian farmers that these contracts will be the salvation of the Dominion's agriculture.

For this to be so, however, Canada must obtain Britain's acceptance of higher prices for wheat, beef, bacon, pork products, eggs and cheese.

The British have stated that they cannot pay more and cannot even continue to pay present prices because of the dollar shortage.

The freeing of the balance of the United States loan to Britain may help slightly towards breaking the present deadlock here, but a Government source said that it would not consider subsidizing farmers nor consider further credit to Britain.

A diversion of supplies would not only leave Britain short but would give Canada a problem of finding and holding new markets after the breakup of the smooth trading machinery built up with Britain since the war.—Reuter.

Bus And Subway Strike Today

POLICE ROUND-UP SABOTEURS

Union-Govt. Parleys

Paris, Dec. 7.—All Paris subway and bus operators will go out on strike Monday morning in a 48-hour demonstration for higher wages, representatives of the Communist dominated General Confederation of Labour, CGT, voted tonight.

The subway and bus strike was voted shortly after the French Ministry of Interior had announced the arrest of nearly 1,000 persons in a nationwide campaign against sabotage in strike bound factories, railways and harbours. It said security police had made these arrests in the past eight days.

A Ministry spokesman said: "Some have been detained, others fined and a few jailed." He said about 500, had been arrested yesterday and today. Several arrests were made in Paris subway terminals today. A prefecture spokesman said: "One man had 18 'handles' in his satchel. A handle is used to cut off the power in a subway motor. He could have stopped nine trains."

Sabotage sent three railroad trains crashing from their tracks last week. In one wreck 20 persons were killed.

The Interior Ministry spokesman refused to say whether any foreigners had been arrested, but a police report this morning said 13 foreigners had been caught performing acts of sabotage.

About 150 persons have been arrested in Marseilles since longshoremen there went out on strike nearly a month ago, but there was general calm throughout the Mediterranean seaport today. Police did not report one act of violence.

The government controlled French radio read to its listeners a complete text of the new laws making sabotage punishable by prison terms up to 10 years. The law defines sabotage as "any act that makes a machine or piece of machinery cease to function."

Minister of Labour Rene Mayer, non-Communist Labour leader Leon Jouhaux and Communist leader Benoit Frachon met on what a Labour Ministry spokesman described as "a high echelon discussion" of the whole French labour situation.—Associated Press.

SABOTAGE DIES DOWN

Paris, Dec. 7.—The acts of sabotage by strike terrorists died down today and the strike itself appeared to be collapsing as the Government's anti-sabotage bill became law on publication in Journal Officiel.

No incidents were reported here before midnight from Southern France, where most of the disturbances connected with the strike wave had occurred.

Observers saw new evidence of the weakening of the attitude of the General Confederation of Labour, the spearhead of the strike movement, in the statement published today by the Communist Joint General Secretary, M. Benoit Frachon.

While stressing that workers must not allow their position to be weakened, M. Frachon said: "The Federal Executive of the CGT has repeated that it is always ready to discuss with the Government of wages which promise a solution of the conflict favourable to the workers' demands."

M. Frachon denied that the CGT had launched an order for a general strike.

He said tonight that he hoped there might be an early settlement of the three-weeks old French strikes.

He had just attended a meeting between strike leaders (and the Minister of Labour, M. Daniel Mayer, at which the Government proposals to end the stoppages were discussed.

M. Mayer received all the members of the Executive, both Communist and non-Communist, of the General Confederation of Labour (the Confederation General du Travail).

After discussing the plan for 90 minutes in a room placed at their disposal at the Ministry, the leaders again went into conference with the Minister.

M. Frachon said that there were still one or two points on which agreement with the Government had not been reached.

"We have submitted counter proposals especially on the question of guaranteeing a minimum wage and

Knives & Guns Active In Palestine

JEWS KILLED AND WOUNDED

Jerusalem, Dec. 7.—Knives and guns claimed additional lives in turbulent Palestine and spreading new destruction added to the growing fear of a Holy war.

Violence on the eighth day of rioting since the United Nations decision to partition the Holy Land resulted in the death of seven Jews and the wounding of numerous Jews and Arabs.

New violence included: one Jew was killed and three wounded by bullets which raked a Jewish bus enroute to Tel-Aviv from the settlements in the Negebe.

Jews and Arabs exchanged gunfire in the strife-torn area between Jewish Tel-Aviv and Arab Jaffa. One Jew was killed and two others wounded. An Arab constable suffered serious gunfire wounds.

WOMAN SLAIN

Three Jews—including one woman—were killed in Arab attacks on Jewish buses in Ramle and suburban Jerusalem.

A Jewish banana merchant was killed in the Hachamel market and for the second time in two days the body of a stabbed Jew was found near the Jaffa mosque.

Jewish informants said a small Arab mob from the old city of Jerusalem attacked Jewish homes on the slope of Mount Mori, 100 yards from the headquarters of the British Army in the King David Hotel.

Arab security patrols surrounded the old city section where a grenade wrecked an Arab home last night and killed three inmates.

Later dispatches reported that two more Jews and four Arabs were wounded in Jaffa.

The Jews were wounded by gunfire directed at a Jewish bus on the Jerusalem-Jaffa road.

It was announced officially that the High Commissioner Sir Alan Cunningham had conferred with David Ben Gurion, Jewish Agency Executive Chairman, and Dr Hussein Khalidi, Arab Executive Secretary on "matters concerning the withdrawal of the civil administration and the British military from Palestine."—Associated Press.

IRGUN'S THREAT

Jerusalem, Dec. 7.—The Irgun Zvai Leumi, Jewish terrorist organization, threatened tonight to launch an offensive against Arab gang centres and the British who are behind them.

It warned in a broadcast that any British attacks on "Jewish security forces" would be "retained with fire."

Renewing its anti-British tirade for the first time since the United Nations decision on the partition of Palestine, the Irgun declared that Jewish forces should "deflate the time-table of the British withdrawal."

Six Jews were injured; two of them seriously, when a hand grenade was thrown into a crowded bus near the Hebrew University tonight, it was officially announced.

Both Arab and Jewish authorities in Palestine began calling up their forces in Palestine today after a week of strife with 49 violent deaths.

Leopold Ready To Return

Issues Declaration

Brussels, Dec. 7.—King Leopold of the Belgians told a meeting at Pregny, near Geneva, that he was ready to resume the responsibility as head of his dynasty, according to a communique issued tonight by his secretariat in Brussels.

The King said: "I am ready as before—when it will be publicly proclaimed that nothing has tarnished the honour of the head of the dynasty—to assume the responsibility of these duties with double concern for all Belgians beyond political parties—in a climate of unity and concord, and to co-operate usefully in national reconstruction and international solidarity."

"In taking the oath to respect the Constitution and the laws of the Belgian people, I have contracted before the nation duties which it is not fit for me to elude."

The monarch was addressing a delegation of the "Congress for the Solution of the Royal Problem," a non-party movement founded in Belgium.

King Leopold's declaration was deprived of immediate political significance by the fact that it was addressed to representatives of an unofficial body, but it was generally considered here a prelude to a Belgian Government declaration on the "Royal question," expected some time next week.

PARTIES DISAGREE

While Belgium's three-year old problem of monarchy was now obviously entering a new phase, no clearcut solution was yet in view in face of the stubborn disagreement on the issue of the country's two leading political parties—Socialists and Social Christians.

The Coalition Government is composed of Socialists who firmly oppose the King's return on the ground of his "unconstitutional attitude" and the Social Christians who have been the King's supporters throughout the dispute.

The Government, it was understood, has already drafted a declaration stating that the King "did not profit his honour" during the war when he surrendered to the Germans and during the country's occupation thereafter, but making reservations as to some of King Leopold's actions before and during this time.—Reuter.

1948 Coal Export Target

Gloucester, England, Dec. 7.—Britain hoped to export in 1948 10,000,000 tons more coal than in 1947 either directly to foreign countries or in the form of bunkers for ships, the Minister of Fuel and Power, Mr Hugh Gaitkell, announced here tonight.

The 1948 coal production target would be 14,000,000 tons more than the 200,000,000-tons figure fixed for 1947, he said.

The coal output at present was "only enough to get us by" as far as internal needs were concerned. Apart from the recent decisions to permit occasional cargo shipments of coal abroad, Britain was not exporting.—Reuter.

British Police Checking On Christmas Racketeers

London, Dec. 7.—The approach of the Christmas season in Britain's countryside this weekend was marked by increased police patrols and farmers are taking precautions against large-scale raids by poultry and Christmas thieves.

The racketeers, large and small, know that at this time of the year, stolen turkeys, geese, ducks and other fowls find a ready market among meat-starved restaurants, hotels and private buyers—"with no questions asked."

Last year, thousands of pounds worth of poultry passed into the blackmarket in this manner. The thieves often work in highly organized gangs.

One band of robbers are believed to use chloroform, gas and a specially equipped van to regular swoops on farms in the counties around London. Their agents tour the countryside to spy for favourable opportunities and the raiders work noiselessly.

A subsidiary racket is the plundering of fir trees and holly plantations. "Spivs," the popular slang word for racketeers, working just before dawn, uproot the young saplings or saw them off at the base.

Within a few hours, the trees are for sale in London street markets where they fetch high prices.

Farmers, armed with rifles and sticks, will keep night vigil during the next two weeks to help the police.

In addition, Scotland Yard wireless cars keep a constant vigil on the edge of the Metropolitan police district and check incoming traffic as most of the stolen goods are sold in London.

Officials of the Ministry of Food, meanwhile, are worried by the illicit slaughtering of pigs, sheep and cattle for sale in the blackmarket, which is believed to have reached enormous proportions in recent months.

Unofficial estimates say that the number of pigs illegally killed—and thus lost to the official meat rationing scheme—was over 600,000 in the last 12 months.

Press reports today suggested that the recent police investigations have unearthed extensive barter deals between farmers and black-market purchasers who exchange clothing, tinned food and petrol for meat, butter and eggs.—Reuter.

Importance Of Public Opinion In Britain's Social Life

By OSWALD DUTCH

WHEN foreigners visit London and for the first time hear the speakers in Hyde Park, near the Marble Arch, addressing large audiences from their "soap boxes," they are always surprised to learn that this world-famous institution really does exist. So many tales have been heard overseas about "Prince Monolulu" and other well-known Hyde Park speakers that they can scarcely believe that in the heart of London any man or woman may speak freely, may criticise, attack the Government, conduct a choir, hold a religious service or anything else which may come within the category of these free gatherings opposite Park Lane and Oxford Street.

HYDE PARK SPEAKERS

THE Hyde Park open air speakers, just as these at Trafalgar Square or the Tower of London, or many other places in the metropolis, are a well-established institution which must be regarded as part of "public opinion" in Britain. "Letters to the Editor" which appears almost every day in the national newspapers are another deep-rooted component of this "public opinion." It also manifests itself in the numerous gatherings in clubs and other unions, in Britain's characteristics "pubs," in debates held at the universities and in the schools, and even in the "queues" which form in front of shops, cinemas and theatres, and finally in Parliament, where it comes to earth in legislation.

I do not believe there is another country in the world where public opinion has become such a powerful factor as in Britain. Much less is said in Britain of this public opinion than in many other countries but, nevertheless, or perhaps because of this, its influence in every sphere of public life is always unmistakable.

POWER FACTOR

IT is not intended to refer here to the fact that every Member in the House of Commons represents the worries and wishes of his electorate, still less is it a question of the influence of clear-cut party decisions. It is merely the spontaneous utterances of agreement or disapproval by the public as a whole and requires no special organisation, guidance, or propaganda in order to determine at any time, with unfailing certainty that which is right and that which is wrong.

Perhaps the best way to explain the power factor of this public opinion is to give a few examples. Recently a German prisoner-of-war fell in love with a British girl; he wished to marry her but this was forbidden. And when the girl had a child, the German P.O.W. was sentenced by a military court to one year's imprisonment. Showers of letters and articles appeared in the Press; his sentence was branded as a violation of the most elementary human rights, and a few days later a Bill was submitted to the House of Commons allowing German P.O.W.s to marry British girls. This would entail that the sentenced P.O.W. had not committed any crime and would have to be reprieved.

Human rights form the major concern of Britain's public opinion. A short while ago, for example, a reform of the marriage laws took place because, despite opposition by the Church, public opinion had succeeded in effecting the speeding up of divorce proceedings and the modernisation of divorce laws.

When the German Commander-in-Chief in Italy, Marshal Kesselring, was sentenced to death recently by a British military court, public opinion, mainly among high-ranking British officers who had fought against Kesselring, urged for a reprieve at such length that eventually it was granted.

Another instance occurred when the British Government forbade the sending of food parcels to the starving people of Europe, and almost immediately a "Save Europe Now" movement was formed. A result of this movement was that in a short time it was arranged that anyone who was willing to go without part of his own rations could legally send a limited quantity of such parcels to his hungry friends on the Continent.

OTHER PROBLEMS

NATURALLY, public opinion embraces other problems which do not deal actually with human rights. When in 1946 the then British Minister of Food, for reasons of economy, suddenly cancelled all further imports of dehydrated eggs (egg powder) there was almost a revolution among housewives. Imports had to be resumed, and shortly afterwards the Minister of Food was replaced by a new official. The Government's housing policy has been influenced repeatedly by public opinion, and this power factor has always been taken into consideration also regarding Britain's food policy.

The interesting thing about all these developments is that they are rarely the result of preliminary action, party measures or decisions in principle. The reaction of public opinion is spontaneous. Whenever a group of people, who for the most part do not even know each other, who have no direct contact but, who from their own inner feelings, sense that something unjust has occurred, simultaneously decide on joint action, all participants know that they are then up against "public opinion."

NO MISUSE

WHEN the injustice has been removed, not one of them who may have helped to bring about the sudden change has an undue sense of self-importance. Thanks or acknowledgment from those who will benefit are not expected.

It is precisely this attribute which makes "public opinion" in Britain such a factor of power; because no one undertakes to substitute justice for demagogical reasons, or to gain influence, therefore, no misuse can be made of it. It is always a question of reason being victorious, of the enforcement of justice or of strengthening humanity. And provided such British Government acknowledges these pure motives of "public opinion," human rights and cause of humanity will be in good hands.

NOBODY LISTENS TO HIM

By ROBERT VERMILLION

Lake Success.—Paul You has come a long way from Hopch Province.

Backed by a string of degrees from Chinese and Swiss schools and universities, fluent in at least two languages, not counting Chinese, Paul now sits for six hours daily in a glass-enclosed booth at the United Nations.

Hunched over a wooden shelf, earphones clamped to his head, Paul twists into Chinese the difficult figures of speech of French, English and American.

But Paul is a working symbol of futility. Nobody listens to him.

The Chinese delegate's earphones lie idly on his desk, if the speaker is using English or French. If the speaker uses Russian or Spanish, the Chinese delegate listens—to the English translation.

When the Chinese delegate speaks, he speaks in English. And when the only person who could possibly be interested in hearing Chinese is on the floor, speaking English, Paul manfully translates back into Chinese—for nobody.

This situation doesn't disturb Paul.

"Good practice," he said, grinning.

U.N. ECONOMY

But it has disturbed some economy-minded people in the U.N. They want to know why they have to pay people in the U.N. They want to know why they have to pay Paul and seven other Chinese interpreters for practice. To say nothing of 11 Chinese translators who carefully paint on slick paper in intricate Chinese characters the official records of United Nations so that they can be duplicated on an expensive "electric eye" machine.

Paul has an answer to this. So have Wellington Koo, P. Y. Cheng and Chang Chung-Fu, Chinese delegates.

"We are entitled to translation and interpretation to the same extent as the Russians," Dr. Chang says. "After all, like the Russian, Chinese is one of the five official languages."

"We must have an adequate number of Chinese versions of official records, statements, documents and speeches for distribution among the Chinese people," Paul said.

As far as translations are concerned, the Chinese are much more reasonable than the Russians. The Chinese have asked for only two documents in Chinese in the past month.

HIS PRIVILEGE

The budget advisory committee is discussing elimination of Russian, Spanish and Chinese from the list of languages used in the official records. This would save U.N. $1,000,000.

But the matter of interpretation is not so easy.

The question arose a year ago. It was pointed out that then, as now, nobody was listening to the Chinese. "Very well," said a Chinese delegate, "I will use my privilege of speaking in Chinese."

He did so. The only Chinese interpreter in the five interpretation booths was caught with his mouth open. The French, English, Spanish and Russian interpreters frantically spun their switches seeking the speaker in a language they understood.

The delegate started again. The Chinese interpreter repeated it in English. The French, Spanish and Russian listened to the English version and translated into their own languages.

The Chinese delegate won his point.—United Press.

BY THE WAY by Beachcomber

PARTRIDGE shooting begins, and woe to the cad who started walking the stubble at a few minutes before midnight on August 31. Every decent club in town will close its doors against him.

I knew a fearfully jolly sort of blighter who was invited to a place for some partridge shooting. He arrived with all his kit, as it were, and dinner was served. In the middle of the meal, wishing to say something, he raised his glass and said, "Here's to the pheasants we're going to pot."

A silence as of the Glacial Period rewarded his salvo. "I should have said partridges," he muttered, red as beetroot to the roots of his teeth.

But it was too late. The car was brought round, his bags were packed and loaded, and they told him there was a slow train back to London at 10.12.

Same again

THIRTY-FOUR years later, the son of his host, wishing to make up a shooting party thought of his father's old friend. The family were against having him, after what he had said. But they finally agreed to ask him.

Down he came on September 1 and in the middle of dinner raised his glass and drank to "the pheasants we are going to pot."

The same silence fell. The poor old chap said to his host, "I meant partridges. Will you tell them to have my luggage brought down and put on the car? I suppose that damnable 10.12 still stops at every station on the way to London?"

No way out

FOURTEEN years later, the old boy's son was invited for September 1 by the original host's grandson. But you can guess what happened. It ran in the family. Except that there was no 10.12, and he had to sleep at the Station Hotel.

Music of the week

THREE graceful little songs from the "List of Huntingdonshire Cabmen" were sung at the Eolian Hall by Mme. Oriona Travella. She made the mistake of singing them too sentimentally, and her pronunciation of some of the more difficult names was at fault.

The settings, by Mr. A. L. Reeves were adequate, but too solemn, and in the third song one was conscious of a certain monotony of effect when Guckwynd, E. P. H., was repeated twice in a very slow passage. Possibly recitative is the best setting for such material.

Women BEAUTY ARTS

By LOIS LEEDS

Posed by Love Lindsey for Lois Leeds.

"Miss Lovable" sets a new ear-coif fashion!

"MISS LOVABLE"

Being chosen from among the beauties of the entire state of Florida as "Miss Lovable" is enough to go to any girl's head! But when the girl has brains as well as beauty like Love Lindsey, the girl in our photograph, she isn't likely to let even the title of Beauty Queen upset her plan for life.

Like so many wholesome young American girls, this young lady has a head full of ambitions for the future. Her ambitions center around a career as a doctor. She ranked highest in her state in scholarship and is entering college to study medicine.

But she has grounded herself well in other things too: she sews, cooks and has lots of practical, down-to-earth ideas about good looks.

She is of the opinion that a girl's hair is her greatest beauty asset and that its care should be first on every list of beauty chores. Her own hair is always clean and sparkling. It's to girls like her that liquid conditioning shampoo is a friend indeed, because it makes hair clean in the twinkling of an eye and brings out light and plims that add radiance.

No rich, whey, the L. a Beauty Queen or a queen in her own circle, likes to prevent a static, unchanging personality to her world. By keeping her hair sweetly clean at an easy-to-manage length, she can keep up with fashion changes in hair-styles or can vary the arrangement to suit her own wishes. And, after all, that's every woman's ambition—to make her hair responsive to her own mood, or the moods of fashion, or both. The hairstyle shown here is Love's interpretation of the new ear-coif.

Maybe we can't all win beauty contests but there's nothing to stop us from winning admiring glances from our friends. And the best way to do that is to take stock of our own glamour assets and make the most of them. And as in the case of every woman, so in the case of Love Lindsey, beautiful, well kept hair is the truest barometer of Good Looks!

Exploring The Universe With Aid Of Rockets

Exploration of the universe on an "undreamed-of" scale is not far off in the forthcoming rocket age, predicts Dr Fritz Zwicky, California Institute of Technology scientist.

Rocket-borne telescopes, photographing the heavens at heights of 300 to 600 miles, will expand tremendously the present knowledge of the universe, Dr Zwicky, Professor of Astrophysics, told U.S. Army and Navy officials.

"The construction of very high-flying rockets is imperative and should be undertaken without delay," he declared, adding that he is planning research on primary rockets of the V-2 type, which would carry smaller, secondary rockets. The smaller rockets, he said, may reach heights up to 600 miles, carrying scientific equipment. The telescope and camera-carrying rockets would be examined by scientists on their return to earth.

He predicted that rocket-borne telescopes will relegate earth-tied telescopes to a secondary role.

Artificial Meteors

Dr Zwicky said that he also foresees "the possibility of spectroscopic prospecting on the surface of planetary bodies" by shooting artificial meteors on the rocket principle from the earth.

"If the particles are large enough," said Zwicky, "the resulting flashes of their landings on the Moon, on Jupiter and other planets, carrying conveniently observable high present-day telescopic equipment."

Rockets, he concluded, are the main tool in opening "an era of an entirely new type of scientific experimentation."—Associated Press.

FESTIVAL TO HONOUR CHOPIN

Music lovers of Poland are already laying plans for a great international music festival in the little Polish village of Zelazowa Wola in the autumn of 1949 to honour one of the nation's greatest composers, Frederic Chopin.

The year marks the centenary of Chopin's death. Arrangements are being made to accommodate several thousand visitors from abroad, including the United States, Great Britain, France, Soviet Russia and all Slav countries.

Highlight of the music festival is to be an international Chopin competition for young pianists to discover the best interpreters of Chopin's works.

Paderewski Version

Publication is also planned in time for the centenary of all of Chopin's compositions in the revised version arranged and edited by Ignace Jan Paderewski.

For several years before the last war, Paderewski, at the request of the Chopin Institute in Warsaw, read and re-played all of Chopin's compositions. He is credited with having made substantial changes and corrections in so-called original Chopin works.

The little peasant house in Zelazowa Wola, 35 miles west of Warsaw, where Chopin was born, like many other famous spots in Poland, was looted by the Germans. The Nazis left in the house only the wrecked, ancient piano which the composer used for his first lessons.—Associated Press.

McKENNEY ON BRIDGE

Lead 'From Fright' Helps Declarer Win

By WILLIAM E. McKENNEY

ARE you familiar with the expression, "He-led from fright?" The bridge player who reaches in and gets a card because it is his turn to play will never be a good player. He should have a reason for every play he makes, though of course his reasoning may not always be correct. When today's hand was played, the opening leader, who was a good sound player, selected a lead which gave declarer a correct reading on the hand.

When declarer played low from dummy on the opening spade lead, East won with the king and return-
